Judgment of MR JUSTICE TOMLINSON

MR JUSTICE TOMLINSON: The claimant is a company incorporated in the Cayman Islands. It deals in secondary debt. It trades securities on inter-dealer markets. It does so with the benefit of a line of credit guaranteed by its parent. Apparently the identity of the parent, by whom the claimant is wholly owned, is commercially sensitive. It has been redacted from the independent auditor's report dated 21st March 2003, placed before the court.

The claimant sues as assignee of all right, title and interest in $11,999,999.80 due under a Loan Agreement dated 18th April 1984, pursuant to which the defendant state, to which I shall refer as "Congo, "was the borrower. The lenders were 11 banks. They are B.A.I.I. plc, International Westminster Bank plc, Standard Chartered Bank plc, Banque Paribas (London), Al Saudi Banque (London), Société Générale (London branch), Williams and Glyn's bank plc, Middle East Bank Limited, Banque Belge Limited, Banque Belgo-Zairoise du Zaire

1 S.A, and Algemene Bank Nederland N.V.

2 The Loan Agreement was in respect of 3 a loan of up to $13.5 million. I do not know 4 if the entire facility was drawn down.

5 The first repayment of principal,
6 one-ninth of the whole, was due six months
7 after the date of the agreement. I am told 8 that some interest may have been paid in 1984 9 but no principal has apparently ever been 10 repaid and no interest paid, certainly, since 11 1985.

12 The claimant acquired its interest
13 pursuant to four assignments. The first in 14 time is dated 29th December 2000, the assignor
15 was Westgate International LP and the amount
16 assigned was $6,876,622.30, together with all
17 accrued and unpaid interest.

18 The second assignment in time was 19 22nd March 2001. The assignor was the 20 International Bank of Miami NA. The amount
21 assigned was $1,623,377.50, together with all
22 unpaid and accrued interest.

23 The third assignment is dated
24 11th April 2001. The assignor was Salomon
25 Brothers Holdings Company Inc. The amount

1 assigned was $1 million, together with all
2 unpaid and accrued interest.

3 The fourth assignment is dated
4 19th April 2001. The assignor was FH
5 International Financial Services, Inc. The 6 amount assigned was $2.5 million, together with 7 all unpaid and accrued interest.

8 It is to be observed that none of those 9 assignors is an original party to the Loan
10 Agreement. Each of the assignments is subject 11 to the standard terms for assignments of loan 12 assets as amended from time to time of the 13 Emerging Markets Traders Association, the terms 14 of which are incorporated by reference into the 15 assignments. I have not been shown those 16 terms. I do not know through how many hands 17 these loan assets passed before finding their 18 way to the claimant. Equally, I do not know 19 what was the consideration furnished by the 20 claimant for each of the assignments.
21 Apparently that, too, is commercially
22 sensitive. At any rate, I have not been told 23 about it, notwithstanding that I had expressed 24 the view that it might be relevant to the 25 exercise of my discretion, since I am asked to

1 balance relevant hardship in the event that I
2 do or do not grant the relief claimed.

3 This action was begun on 4 14th October 2002. The defendant has neither 5 acknowledged service nor taken any part in the 6 proceedings. Steps have been taken to ensure 7 that the defendant is aware of the proceedings
8 and of the applications that have been made,
9 first, before Cresswell J on 10 20th December 2002, and now before me on 14th 11 and 15th April 2003. I should be very 12 surprised if the defendant is not aware of the 13 proceedings and of the applications, or rather 14 of the trial, since that is what has now 15 occurred before me.

16 On 20th December, 2002, the matter came 17 before Cresswell J on an application for 18 summary judgment. The claimant sought an order 19 to the following effect:

20 1. The defendant to pay the claimant the 21 sum of $56,047,443.31 together with the further 22 sum of $538,137.12 in respect of interest from 23 13th September 2002 to 12th November 2002, 24 and interest thereafter as per the terms of 25 paragraph 7D of the particulars of claim.

1 2. Save as provided for in paragraph 3
2 below, the defendant be restrained, whether 3 acting by itself, its servants or agents,
4 including but not limited to SMPC or any other
5 Congolese public entity or otherwise howsoever,
6 from making or causing or procuring to be made 7 any payments to creditors other than the 8 claimant.

9 3. The defendant be permitted to make 10 payments or to cause or procure payments to be 11 made to creditors other than the claimant, 12 provided that, at the same time as any such 13 payment is made, the defendant makes or causes 14 to be made a pro rata payment to the claimant.

15 4. The defendant be restrained, whether
16 acting by itself, its servants or agents
17 including but not limited to SNPC or any other
18 Congolese public entity or otherwise howsoever,
19 from creating any mortgage, pledge or other 20 security or other preferential arrangement over 21 any of the assets or revenues of the defendant 22 or of any Congolese public entity including but 23 not limited to SNPC in favour of any creditor.

24 The claimant further sought a declaration 25 that, 5, in carrying out the acts identified in

1 paragraphs 11 to 27 of the particulars of 2 claim, the defendant has acted in breach of the 3 provisions of clause 9(d) of the April 1984
4 Loan Agreement.

5 The order sought went on to contain 6 a definition section for the purposes of the 7 order pursuant to which, for example,
8 a definition was given of what was meant by 9 a pro rata payment.

10 That was a somewhat optimistic
11 application, bearing in mind that it was 12 estimated that the hearing would take only 13 an hour or an hour and a half. Cresswell J, 14 whose experience in these matters is very 15 great, plainly regarded the injunctive relief
16 sought as novel and unprecedented. He plainly 17 also regarded as striking the seeking of such 18 relief in December 2002 by an assignee, not 19 an original party, in circumstances where the 20 first event of default under the Loan Agreement 21 occurred in 1984, and the claimant had not 22 acquired any interest until the very end of the 23 year 2000. To that I might add that the loan 24 should have been fully repaid by the end of 25 1988.

1 Cresswell J granted summary judgment on 2 the money claim. He directed a speedy trial of 3 the remaining issues, principally the question 4 whether the claimant is entitled to the 5 injunctive relief claimed. That depends, in 6 part, upon the meaning and effect of 7 Clause 9(d) in the Loan Agreement, which is 8 an undertaking by the borrower "to procure that 9 the claims of all other parties under this 10 agreement will rank as general obligations of 11 the People's Republic of the Congo, at least 12 pari passu in right and priority of payment 13 with the claims of all other creditors of the 14 People's Republic of the Congo, and not to 15 create or allow to subsist any mortgage pledge 16 or other security or other preferential 17 arrangement over any of the assets or revenues 18 of the People's Republic of the Congo, or of 19 any Congolese public entity in favour of any 20 creditor."

21 As to this, Cresswell J said:

22 "As to the second and third claims, both 23 by way of negative injunction, the claims 24 relying on the negative pledge clause and the 25 pari passu clause, I suggested to Mr McQuater,

1 on behalf of the claimant, that in view of the 2 importance and nature of these claims, the 3 court would be assisted by the appointment of 4 an amicus. Mr McQuater has very sensibly taken
5 instructions from his client and the claimant
6 now accepts that the second and third claims 7 should proceed to trial."

8 Her Majesty's Attorney General has 9 appointed Mr Qureshi to assist the court. I am 10 extremely grateful to him for the assistance he 11 has rendered.

12 I must refer briefly to certain other
13 passages in the judgment of Cresswell J given 14 on that occasion. He began his judgment in 15 this way:

16 "This is the hearing of an application by 17 the claimant, Kensington International Limited, 18 for summary judgment under CPR part 24.
19 Kensington is the assignee of all right, title
20 and interest in sums totalling $11,999,999.80, 21 said to be due and owing from the defendant, 22 the Republic of the Congo, under the terms of 23 a Loan Agreement dated 18th April 1984. These 24 amounts, together with interest, have been 25 outstanding for a long time and remain unpaid.

1 "2. Under Clause 19.1-4 of the Loan
2 Agreement, the Republic of the Congo submitted
3 to the jurisdiction of this court and waived 4 immunity from suit and from execution against 5 its property. I refer to the full terms of 6 Clause 19. The Republic of the Congo has, 7 according to the first witness statement of 8 Mr Stephen Pearson, been duly served in 9 accordance with the provisions of clause 19.2 10 of the Loan Agreement, and I so find. The 11 Republic of the Congo has not acknowledged 12 service.

13 "3. On 4th November this year, I gave the 14 claimant permission to proceed by way of 15 summary judgment under CPR part 24, not 16 withstanding the defendant's failure to 17 acknowledge service."

18 At paragraph 7, the judge continued:

19 "The claimant's assignments have been 20 recorded by the agent under the Loan Agreement 21 BNP Paribas, which has also reconciled the 22 amounts due to the claimant as being 23 a principal sum of $12 million together with 24 interest of £44,047,443.31, making a total due 25 as at that 12 December 2002, $56,047,443.31.

1 The claimant seeks judgment for this sum,
2 together with further contractual interest up 3 to 19th December 2002, in the sum of 4 $864,548.16, calculated as set out in the 5 particulars of claim. Thus, the total sum 6 claimed is $56,911,991.47. BNP Paribas is also 7 acting as reconciliation agent for the 8 defendant in relation to the Loan Agreement and 9 in that capacity, has fully reconciled
10 Kensington's interest.

11 "8. Kensington claims the sum is due to it 12 under the Loan Agreement in debt. The debt has 13 been outstanding for a very considerable period 14 of time and has been repeatedly tolled. The 15 most tolling agreement is dated 16 22nd September 1997. That agreement expressly 17 renounces any right to invoke any statute of 18 limitation.

19 "9. The defendant has not appeared by 20 solicitors or counsel today, although it has 21 received a notice of this hearing.

22 "10. In my judgment, having considered
23 the materials before the court, the defendant 24 has no real prospects of successfully defending 25 the claim. Accordingly I give judgment in 1 favour of the claimant in the sum of 2 $56,911,991.47."

3 I have read those passages, not only to 4 set the scene, but also because it is said by 5 Mr McQuater for the claimant that the judge's 6 findings foreclose certain issues which the 7 amicus has raised. The claimant has taken no
8 steps to attempt to enforce its judgment. It 9 has taken the view that Section 12 (5) of the 10 State Immunity Act 1978 is applicable. That 11 section provides:

12 "A copy of any judgment given against a 13 state in default of appearance shall be 14 transmitted through the Foreign and 15 Commonwealth office to the Ministry of Foreign 16 Affairs of that state, and any time for 17 applying to have the judgment set aside, 18 whether prescribed by rules of court or 19 otherwise, shall begin to run two months after 20 the date on which the copy of the judgment is 21 received at the ministry."

22 Also thought to be possibly relevant is 23 CPR 40.10. That rule provides:

24 "Where the claimant obtains default 25 judgment under Part 12 on a claim against the

1 state where the defendant has failed to file an 2 acknowledgement of service, the judgment does 3 not take effect until two months after service 4 on the state of (a) a copy of the judgment and 5 (b) a copy of the evidence in support of the 6 application for permission to enter default 7 judgment, unless the evidence has already been 8 served on the state in accordance with an order 9 made under part 12."

10 The claimant has taken the prescribed
11 steps, and the two month period is apparently 12 about to expire. I rather doubt whether these 13 provisions are applicable, since I doubt 14 whether the summary judgment granted under Part 15 24 is properly to be regarded as a judgment in 16 default of appearance or a default judgment.
17 However, it was no doubt prudent for the 18 claimant to proceed in the manner which it did.

19 There is no evidence before me and there
20 was no evidence before Cresswell J to explain 21 how the banks party to the Loan Agreement came 22 to divest themselves of their interest. There 23 is no direct evidence to the effect that those 24 banks were unpaid. However there is evidence 25 which supports the assertion that the debt

1 remains due, as Cresswell J has expressly 2 found.

3 On 26th February 1988, Congo entered into 4 a refinancing agreement. Annex A lists 60
5 original contracts, of which this Loan
6 Agreement is number 33. The tolling agreement
7 of 22nd September 1997, to which Cresswell J 8 refers in his judgment, is addressed to the 9 banks or financial institutions and their 10 successors in title to which debts are owed 11 under original contracts as defined in the 12 refinancing agreement. I can probably infer
13 from the fact that the debts were being traded 14 that they remained unpaid when acquired by the 15 claimant, as Cresswell J has inferentially 16 found. There is evidence that nothing has been 17 paid to the claimant.

18 I have already referred to clause 9(d) of 19 the Loan Agreement. Pursuant thereto, the 20 claimant seeks (a) specific performance of 21 Congo's obligation under the April 1984 Loan 22 Agreement not to create any mortgage, pledge or 23 other security or other preferential
24 arrangement over any of its assets or revenues
25 in favour of any creditor, that to which it

1 refers as the negative pledge clause, and (b)
2 specific performance of Congo's obligation
3 under the Loan Agreement to pay its creditors 4 on a pari passu basis, pursuant to what is 5 called the pari passu clause.

6 The claimant seeks to enforce these 7 clauses by way of injunctions to prevent their 8 breach, and also seeks a declaration that, in 9 carrying out certain acts, Congo has acted in 10 breach of those clauses.

11 It will be recalled that in Clause 9(d), 12 there is reference to what is described as 13 a Congolese public entity. This is defined in 14 Clause 1 of the Agreement as: "An agency, 15 authority, department, ministry or other
16 instrumentality of Congo and any person 17 directly or indirectly controlled or wholly 18 owned by Congo or by a Congolese public 19 entity".

20 Mr McQuater submits that the meaning of 21 the prohibition in the negative pledge clause 22 is clear and unambiguous. He submits that 23 Congo has demonstrated a history, including a 24 recent history, of non-compliance with the 25 clause, creating securities and other

1 preferential arrangements over its assets, and 2 thereby favouring selected creditors and 3 discriminating against others. Unless 4 restrained, it is suggested, Congo will 5 continue so to do.

6 Mr McQuater goes on to submit that Congo 7 has demonstrated that it has no intention of 8 paying its ordinary creditors, such as those 9 under the April 1984 Loan Agreement.

10 Mr McQuater stresses that the claimant seeks 11 only to restrain future breaches of the clause, 12 rather than seeking to undo past breaches.
13 This approach, he submits, is just and 14 proportionate and creates no material or 15 disproportionate hardship to Congo or anyone 16 else involved. Damages, he suggests, are 17 likely to be an inadequate remedy for breach of 18 the negative breach clause, since Congo plainly 19 will do everything it can not to pay those 20 damages.

21 I agree with Mr McQuater that the meaning 22 of the negative pledge clause is clear. It is 23 designed to prevent the defendant from granting 24 security or other preferential interests over 25 its assets, thereby reducing the pool of assets

1 available to creditors under the April 1984
2 Loan Agreement.

3 Mr McQuater submits that the evidence 4 demonstrates that Congo has a long and 5 demonstrable history of granting security and 6 other preferential interests over its assets to 7 favoured creditors. Usually, he suggests, 8 these favoured creditors are involved with the 9 defendant in the exploitation of its vast oil 10 reserves. Often, it is suggested, these 11 breaches of the negative pledge clause have 12 been carried out on Congo's behalf by Societe 13 de Nationale des Petrole du Congo, SNPC, the 14 state oil company.

15 Mr McQuater submits, and I accept, that 16 the evidence overwhelmingly shows that SNPC is 17 a Congolese public entity for the purposes of 18 Clause 1 of the April 1984 Loan Agreement. As 19 Mr McQuater points out, for the purposes of 20 these claims, this is as far as the claimant 21 needs to go. However, Mr McQuater submits, and 22 I agree, that the evidence in the case does, in 23 fact, go further and demonstrates that SNPC is 24 simply part of the Congolese state and has no 25 existence separate from the state. That is

1 demonstrated by the Congolese legislation,
2 which establishes SNPC and demonstrates that 3 its purposes are to undertake the exploitation 4 of Congo's oil reserves on behalf of Congo, to 5 hold the state's oil related assets on its 6 behalf and to represent the state in oil 7 related matters. The by-laws of SNPC are to 8 similar effect. It is financed by the state.
9 Its function is to act on behalf of the state,
10 it is under the financial and economic control 11 of the state and its officers are government 12 appointees.

13 In a recent decision of the French Court
14 of Appeal, in the matter of SNPC v. Walker
15 International Holdings Limited on 16 23rd January 2003, that court found in 17 contested proceedings that SNPC was simply the 18 alter ego of Congo, thereby affirming the 19 decision at first instance to the same effect.
20 On 29th January 2002, the Tribunal de Grand 21 Instance, Paris reached a similar conclusion in 22 favour of another creditor, Connecticut Bank of 23 Commerce.

24 Furthermore, in a decision in the Grand
25 Court of the Cayman Islands, in Walker v

1 Olearius, 13th August 2002, Graham J found it 2 to be at least arguable, for the purposes of 3 the freezing order which he was invited to 4 make, that SNPC was controlled by Congo.

5 Mr McQuater relies upon four particular 6 alleged breaches of the negative pledge clause.
7 Firstly, he relies upon a transaction described 8 as a hedged crude oil prepayment facility
9 entered into in May 2002. Under this 10 arrangement, SNPC has entered into an agreement 11 for the forward sale of Congo's crude oil to 12 a special purpose vehicle called Olearius 13 Limited, which will make prepayments to SNPC of 14 some $210 million.

15 The prepayments are funded by a facility
16 from Standard Chartered Bank and other lenders, 17 which Olearius is to repay quarterly from 18 onward sales of crude oil. SNPC is the 19 exclusive sales agent for 50 per cent of the 20 oil. The remaining 50 per cent is on-sold to 21 Vitol S.A. Shortfalls in repayments by 22 Olearius are to be made up by deliveries of 23 oil. The arrangements are guaranteed by Congo, 24 which has granted the lenders a variety of 25 security rights over its assets, including

1 Congo's rights to significant quantities of its 2 crude oil. The lenders have also been granted 3 security over the rights to receive the 4 proceeds of the former purchase arrangement and 5 over certain accounts used for the receipt of 6 funds.

7 Next, Mr McQuater points to an agreement
8 in May or June of 2002 whereby Congo and/or 9 SNPC agreed with Société Générale a new 10 pre-financing facility of some $250 million
11 secured against Congo's oil production.
12 Although details of that agreement are not 13 before the court, it seems almost certain from 14 the material which is that this is structured 15 in much the same way as the hedged crude oil
16 prepayment facility, to which I have already 17 referred.

18 Then Mr McQuater points to an agreement 19 made in June 1994 between Congo and the 20 Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, under which 21 various sums were to become due from Congo to 22 CIBC, including payments due in 2001 and 2002.
23 By a letter dated 29th June 1994, which 24 accompanied the facility, Congo gave 25 instructions for certain mining royalties to be

1 is not to be criticised for the delay which has 2 occurred in applying for this relief. Against 3 that, it has to be pointed out that it seems 4 likely that Congo has been in continuous breach 5 of this provision for at least 12 years and 6 probably longer. Furthermore, there is 7 the irony that the two substantial and recent 8 breaches are constituted by arrangements to 9 which Standard Chartered and Société Générale 10 are party. They are both lenders under the 11 original Loan Agreement to the extent of 12 $2 million and $1 million respectively. This 13 feature gives me serious pause for thought as 14 to the appropriateness of the relief which I am 15 asked to grant. It is not easy to evaluate the 16 point without knowing the terms on which these 17 two and other banks divested themselves of 18 their interest and without knowing what 19 relationship the consideration paid by the 20 claimant bore to the size of the debt assigned.

21 Reverting to Mr McQuater's submissions, he 22 goes on to suggest that it is apparent that 23 Congo has no intention of paying ordinary 24 creditors, such as those under the April 1984
25 Loan Agreement. He points to the fact that

1 that agreement was signed almost 18 years ago
2 and that apparently no payments have been made 3 thereunder since 1985.

4 In his decision in the Grand Court of the 5 Cayman Islands, to which I have already 6 referred, Graham J observed that Congo had paid 7 not a cent to the judgment creditor in that 8 case, who was another ordinary unsecured
9 creditor of Congo, and furthermore, that it had 10 evinced an intention never to pay if it could 11 possibly avoid doing so.

12 Mr McQuater submits, on the basis of the 13 evidence before the court, that despite its 14 enormous oil wealth and relatively small 15 population, Congo has become notorious for 16 dishonouring debt obligations. This has been 17 largely due, he suggests, to mismanagement and 18 diversion of its oil revenues and unrecorded 19 expenditure under political control.
20 Apparently, in 2001, Congo produced an average 21 of 262,000 barrels of oil per day, yielding
22 export revenues of approximately $2.5 billion 23 per annum. This in a country with fewer than 24 3 million people. Mr McQuater suggests,
25 therefore, that Congo has available to it

1 a very considerable cash income from its oil 2 production, but is plainly selective in how the 3 money is spent.

4 Mr McQuater goes on to suggest that it is 5 no coincidence that about half of Congo's debt 6 is secured by oil, and it is that half which 7 gets paid. Indeed, he suggests that Congo's
8 practice of entering into pre-financing
9 arrangements in relation to its oil sales 10 appears to be cumbersome and uncommercial, with 11 the sole distinct advantage being that these 12 schemes place a priority lien on the country's 13 future commercial income and thus seek to place 14 it beyond the reach of existing creditors.

15 Furthermore, there is evidence before the 16 court, apparently publicly available also on 17 the Internet, to the effect that the legal 18 structure of the large hedged crude oil
19 prepayment facility, to which I have already 20 referred, was deliberately selected by Congo 21 and by its legal advisors in an attempt to 22 prevent Congo's creditors from seizing oil in 23 the hands of SNPC and to try to reduce the risk 24 of action by Congo's creditors. This 25 information emerges from a memorandum

1 apparently prepared for Congo, or for SNPC, in 2 May of 2002 by Messrs Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen &
3 Hamilton.

4 Mr McQuater submits that where a contract
5 contains an express negative stipulation, 6 breach of it may be generally be restrained by 7 injunction, and in such cases, an injunction is 8 normally granted as a matter of course. It is 9 not, he suggests, in such cases necessary to 10 show that damages would be an inadequate
11 remedy, although an injunction might be refused 12 if it would cause undue hardship or oppression.
13 He submits that the scope of the injunction 14 sought in this action in relation to the 15 negative pledge provision is manifestly fair 16 and proportionate in the circumstances, since 17 the claimant seeks only an order restraining 18 future breaches of the negative pledge clause, 19 rather than seeking an order which would 20 immediately force Congo to unscramble past 21 security arrangements made with its creditors.

22 Furthermore, Mr McQuater submits that,
23 although not a necessary requirement for relief 24 under the negative pledge clause, it does in 25 fact appear to be unlikely that damages for

1 breach of the clause would be an adequate 2 remedy. This, he submits, is because of 3 Congo's attitude towards its ordinary unsecured 4 creditors and its obvious determination to 5 ensure that there are no funds against which 6 such claims can be enforced.

7 On the question whether the injunction 8 sought in relation to the negative pledge would 9 be of any practical benefit to the claimant,
10 Mr McQuater submits that there is good reason 11 to believe that service of notice thereof on 12 third parties might achieve the claimant's 13 purpose, which is, of course, payment to it of 14 the judgment debt. In that regard, Mr McQuater
15 points out that SNPC has a wholly-owned English 16 subsidiary, Societe de Nationale des Petrole du 17 Congo UK Limited, SNPCUK, with a London office.
18 Congo and the SNPC plainly carry out a material 19 part of their financial activities in the 20 exploitation of their oil reserves in or 21 through London and may well hold funds here.
22 Standard Chartered Bank, the principal lender,
23 agent and security agent under the hedged crude
24 oil prepayment facility, is an English bank
25 based in London.

1 Congo and the SNPC, submits Mr McQuater,
2 have significant financial activities in other
3 European Union jurisdictions where this court's 4 judgments and orders should readily be 5 recognised. The French decisions to which I 6 have already referred arose out of apparently 7 successful attempts by creditors of Congo to 8 attach the assets of SNPC in France.

9 Mr McQuater also points to the fact that 10 the parties to be notified under the security 11 assignment relating to the hedged crude oil
12 prepayment facilities are subsidiaries of major 13 European oil companies and that Vitol, which 14 purchases 50 per cent of the oil under the 15 facility, is itself a Swiss company which 16 trades in London through two English 17 subsidiaries. Other lenders to Congo and the 18 SNPC are plainly domiciled in the European 19 Union, for example, Société Générale and 20 WestLB. Mr McQuater submits that it is likely, 21 therefore, that the injunction sought will have 22 a serious effect on Congo's ability to continue
23 to ignore its obligations under the April 1984
24 Loan Agreement.

25 Turning to the pari passu clause,

1 Mr McQuater submits that such clauses are 2 common in unsecured term loan agreements. They 3 generally state that the debt obligations of 4 the borrower under the loan agreement are to 5 rank pari passu and equally with all other 6 present and future obligations of the borrower.
7 The provision is, he suggests, a companion of 8 the negative pledge clause, which regulates the 9 future creation of security for the borrower's 10 debts.

11 Mr McQuater points out that the effect of 12 the pari passu clause, particularly in the 13 context of sovereign loan agreements, has been 14 the subject of considerable discussion and 15 limited authority. There exists a debate as to 16 whether the pari passu clause is (a) a sharing 17 clause which compels the creditor to pay 18 creditors on a pari passu basis, or (b) simply 19 an agreement that the debtor will not create 20 a class of debt or unsecured debt which ranks 21 ahead of the debt created by the particular 22 loan agreement. There is apparently no English 23 authority directly in point.

24 Mr McQuater submits that the pari passu
25 clause in the present agreement is plainly

1 a sharing clause, compelling Congo to pay the 2 claimant on a pro rata basis when it pays
3 other creditors. In this regard, Mr McQuater
4 relies upon the following considerations:

5 First, there is little doubt about the 6 literal meaning of the words "pari passu" in 7 the clause. The Latin means "by equal steps".
8 See also Webster's, "in or to an equal 9 proportion", and Black's Law dictionary, "by 10 an equal progress, equably, rateably, without 11 preference".

12 Secondly, Mr McQuater suggests that 13 insofar as English authority gives guidance, 14 the decision in Bowen v Brecon Railway Company, 15 1867, Law Reports 3, Equity 541, strongly 16 suggests that the pari passu clause means that 17 money to be distributed should be distributed 18 or paid on a pari passu basis. In that case, 19 the statutes of a railway company provided that 20 unsecured bonds issued by the company should be 21 entitled to be:

22 "Paid without any preferences, one above 23 the other, by reason of priority of date of any 24 such bond or otherwise howsoever".

25 It was held that the relevant proceeds

1 were held in trust for the other debenture
2 holders, so that they were paid pari passu.

3 Thirdly, Mr McQuater submits that this 4 result is borne out by the particular and 5 strong wording of the clause in the present
6 case, which refers to the claims of the parties
7 under the Agreement ranking as general
8 obligations, at least pari passu in right and 9 priority of payment, and I emphasise "and 10 priority of payment" with the claims of all 11 other creditors of Congo. Mr McQuater suggests 12 that it is difficult to accord any sensible 13 meaning to the emphasised words if payments are 14 not to be made pari passu.

15 Mr McQuater points out that whereas in the 16 context of corporate loans the competing
17 construction to the effect that the pari passu 18 clause only affects the ranking of debts may 19 make some sense, it makes little sense in 20 relation to a sovereign borrower. In the first 21 case, the clause could preserve a creditor's 22 ranking in an insolvency and ensure that in a 23 liquidation or forced distribution of assets,
24 all creditors, or at least all unsecured
25 creditors, are treated equally. However,

1 Mr McQuater submits, in relation to a sovereign
2 borrower, the clause must bear a different 3 meaning. A state cannot be liquidated nor are 4 there procedures for proration of government 5 debts on a state bankruptcy. The clause, when 6 it appears in a sovereign loan, must therefore 7 provide some further protection to creditors to 8 compensate for their inability to invoke 9 insolvency procedures against the state. That 10 protection should, he suggests, be 11 an enforceable obligation on the state to pay 12 creditors on a pro rata basis.

13 Mr McQuater also referred me to some 14 authority which may have some indirect bearing 15 on the point. There is an Australian
16 authority, Merchants Bills Corporation Limited v 17 Permanent Nominees Australia Limited, 1972 to 18 1973, Australian Law Reports 565, in which 19 Gibbs J in the Australian High Court construed 20 a pari passu obligation as requiring that 21 stockholders be treated equally and that all 22 should receive payment at the same rate of 23 monies owing to them.

24 There is a decision of the United States
25 District Court, Central District of California,

1 in Red Mountain Finance v The Democratic 2 Republic of Congo, dated 30th May 2001, in 3 which Judge Real granted an injunction
4 preventing the payment of the Democratic 5 Republic's external debt unless the claimant
6 also received a proportionate payment of debts
7 owing to it at the same time. He also granted
8 enforcement of the related negative pledge
9 provision. I can, however, attach little 10 weight to this decision since not only have no 11 reasons for it been shown to me but it is also 12 a case in which evidently there was no 13 appearance by the state. It should be 14 emphasised that the Democratic Republic of the 15 Congo is not the defendant in this case.

16 Next, Mr McQuater refers me to a decision
17 of the Court of Appeal in Brussels in September 18 2000 in the case of LP Elliott Associates, 19 relating to injunctive measures to enforce 20 payments of certain Peruvian foreign debt, in 21 the course of which the court held that the 22 pari passu clause required that the debt should 23 be paid equally towards all creditors in 24 proportion to their claim, and also that no 25 creditor could be excluded from the payment of

1 this proportional part of the interest payments
2 in issue. Again, I can give little weight to 3 this latter decision, since it was made upon 4 an ex parte application and the order was 5 directed towards a bank and not towards the 6 Peruvian state.

7 Mr McQuater submits that if the pari passu 8 clause does bear the meaning contended for by 9 the claimant, then it follows, firstly, that 10 Congo has acted in breach of that clause in 11 making preferential payments to creditors in 12 each of the four transactions to which I have 13 already referred above, and secondly, that the 14 clause can and should be the subject of 15 specific enforcement by way of injunction.

16 Again, Mr McQuater submits that damages
17 for breach of this provision would clearly be 18 an inadequate remedy. He submits, with some 19 force, that it would be difficult to calculate 20 the amount of the loss suffered by any one 21 particular creditor of Congo by reason of the 22 various payments which Congo has made in breach 23 of the pari passu clause and, in any event, he 24 suggests, the issue might prove to the 25 academic, given the obvious determination of 1 Congo not to pay its debts.

2 Finally, he suggests that there would be 3 no hardship or oppression to Congo or, indeed, 4 to its other creditors, should they be required 5 to be treated equally with the creditors under 6 the 1984 Loan Agreement.

7 I should perhaps note in passing that, in 8 relation to the pari passu provision,
9 Mr McQuater derives no assistance from the 10 current Encyclopaedia of Banking Law, in which,
11 at paragraph 3418, there is a discussion
12 concerning pari passu clauses in sovereign loan 13 agreements. Here, the editors make the 14 following observation:

15 "It should also be observed that the pari 16 passu clause has nothing to do with the time of 17 payment of unsecured indebtedness, since this 18 depends upon contractual maturities. The 19 undertaking is not broken merely because one 20 creditor is, in fact, paid before another. In 21 the case of a state borrower, the pari passu
22 clause must bear a different construction, 23 since a government cannot be liquidated, nor 24 are there procedures for the pro ration of 25 governmental debt on a state bankruptcy

1 equivalent to those contained in corporate
2 bankruptcies. Hence, a statutorily enforced
3 hierarchy on forced dissolution is not in 4 point. It is suggested that a pari passu
5 clause in state creditors is primarily intended 6 to prevent the legislative ear-marking of 7 revenues of the government, or the legislative 8 allocation of inadequate foreign currency
9 reserves to a single creditor and is generally 10 directed against legal measures which have the 11 effect of preferring one set of creditors over 12 the others or discriminating between creditors 13 at a time when the state is unable to pay its 14 debts as they fall due.

15 "It is thought that mere contractual 16 arrangements, as opposed to legislation, should 17 not conflict with the pari passu clause of the 18 type specified above. The question depends on 19 the circumstances and the matter does not 20 appear to have received judicial attention in 21 England. Areas where contracts may be 22 sufficient to come within the clause might 23 include settlements and debt compromise 24 agreements involving more than one creditor and 25 entered into by a bankrupt state."

1 Recognising that that commentary is 2 unhelpful to him, Mr McQuater nonetheless
3 points out that the sample pari passu clause, 4 to which reference is made a little earlier in 5 the text than the passage which I have read, 6 does not contain the critical priority of 7 payment language upon which he here places such 8 reliance.

9 Mr Qureshi made observations under seven 10 broad heads. Firstly, he reminded me of 11 Section 1 (2) of the State Immunity Act 1978, 12 which provides:

13 "A court shall give effect to the immunity 14 conferred by this section, even though the 15 state does not adhere in the proceedings in 16 question."

17 Mr Justice Mummery referred to and 18 considered this provision in United Arab 19 Emirates v Abdel Ghafar in 1995, Industrial 20 Court Reports, page 65. At page 73, Mr Justice
21 Mummery said this:

22 "The decision of this Appeal Tribunal in 23 Senupta v Republic of India 183, Industrial 24 Court Reports, 221, illustrates how seriously
25 the court regards this obligation. [I

1 interpose to point out that that is the 2 obligation under Section 1 (2) of the State
3 Immunity Act.] In that case, the foreign 4 state did not appear to take the point on 5 jurisdiction. The court asked for 6 the appointment of an amicus to assist it. If 7 the court has a duty under statute to give 8 effect to the immunity conferred, even though 9 the state does not appear to claim it, that 10 duty may be all the greater in the case where 11 the foreign state has, as here, expressly taken 12 the point of immunity.

13 The overriding duty of the court, of its 14 own notion, is to satisfy itself that effect 15 has been given to the immunity conferred by the 16 State Immunity Act 1978. That duty binds all 17 tribunals and courts, not just the court or 18 tribunal which heard the original proceedings.
19 If the tribunal in the original proceedings has 20 not given effect to the immunity conferred by 21 the act, then it must be the duty of the appeal 22 tribunal to give effect to it by correcting the 23 error.

24 Although Mr Qureshi did not raise the 25 point, I am myself concerned as to the extent

1 to which it is legitimate to grant the relief 2 sought in the light of section 13 (2)(a) of the 3 State Immunity Act, which provides:

4 "Subject to subsection 3 and 4 below, (a) 5 relief shall not be given against a state by 6 way of injunction or order for specific 7 performance or for the recovery of land or 8 other property."

9 Subsection 3 provides:

10 "Subsection 2 above does not prevent the 11 giving of any relief or the issue of any 12 process with the written consent of the state 13 concerned, and any such consent which may be 14 contained in a prior agreement, may be 15 expressed so as to apply to a limited extent or 16 generally that a provision merely submitting to 17 the jurisdiction of the courts is not to be 18 regarded as consent for the purposes of this 19 subsection."

20 Mr McQuater suggests that the written
21 consent of Congo is to be found in Clause 19.3
22 of the Loan Agreement. That provides:

23 "The borrower consents generally in 24 respect of any suit, action or proceedings 25 arising out of or in connection with this

1 agreement to the giving of any relief or the 2 issue of any process in connection with any 3 such suit, action or proceedings, including, 4 without limitation, the making, enforcement or 5 execution against any property whatsoever, 6 irrespective of its use or intended use of any 7 order or judgment which may be made or given in 8 such action or proceedings."

9 Mr McQuater naturally relies upon the 10 apparent width of this clause, in particular 11 the reference to "any relief" and the words
12 "without limitation". He may be right, 13 although my concern remains that enforcement of 14 the injunctive relief now sought could only be 15 achieved by criminal or quasi criminal 16 procedures, such as sequestration, to which,
17 most assuredly, Congo has not consented. It 18 may be, however, that considerations such as 19 these should not preclude me from finding that 20 a sufficiently unequivocal consent has been 21 given to the granting of the injunctive relief.

22 Next, Mr Qureshi made observations
23 concerning the efficacy of the alleged service
24 of proceedings on Congo. Mr McQuater contends 25 that my consideration of these points is

1 precluded by reason of an issue estoppel in 2 relation thereto generated by the judgment of 3 Cresswell J. I do not consider that that is 4 the correct approach. Estoppel by judgment is 5 a rule of evidence, see Chitty on Contracts, 6 28th Edition, Volume 1, at paragraph 26.10, and 7 the cases there cited. It is founded upon the 8 public interest in the finality of litigation 9 rather than the achievement of justice between 10 individual litigants. It cannot preclude the 11 court having regard to a relevant consideration 12 when asked to grant discretionary relief,
13 particularly when the relief is highly unusual 14 and invasive injunctive relief which is 15 directed towards fettering the ability of a 16 foreign sovereign state to exploit its natural 17 resources.

18 Clause 19.2 of the Loan Agreement 19 provides:

20 "The borrower hereby and irrevocably
21 appoints the Law Debenture Trust Corporation
22 plc, Estates House, 66 Gresham Street, London,
23 EC2B 7HX, as its agent for service and process 24 in any such suit, action or proceedings in 25 England ... provided that if at any time the

1 People's Republic of the Congo maintains an 2 embassy or consulate in London ... any process 3 relating to proceedings arising out of or in 4 connection with this agreement may be validly 5 served on the borrower if served on the 6 ambassador or consul general for the time being 7 of the People's Republic of the Congo in 8 London."

9 Also of relevance in this regard is 10 Clause 7 of the Agreement. Clause 7 contains 11 conditions precedent to the obligation of the 12 banks to make the loan.

13 At 7(b)1, there is provision for the 14 furnishing, as a condition precedent, of 15 documents evidencing the appointment of the Law
16 Debenture Trust Corporation plc as process 17 agent in London for the purpose of the 18 Agreement, and the acceptance of such 19 appointment by the Law Debenture Trust 20 Corporation, substantially in the form of 21 Exhibit B.

22 Exhibit B contains a detailed letter in 23 draft form addressed to the Law Debenture Trust 24 Corporation, to be executed on behalf of the 25 Congo. In particular, it contains instructions

1 as to what is to be done by the Law Debenture
2 Trust Corporation upon receipt of the letter, 3 and it also refers to the terms upon which the 4 Law Debenture Trust Corporation shall act as 5 agent for the Congo in relation to the 6 agreement.

7 There is no evidence before the court
8 either way as to whether this or, indeed, any 9 other condition precedent was satisfied, but 10 the Law Debenture Trust Corporation has no 11 record of the Loan Agreement. When served with 12 the documents in October 2002, the manager of 13 the Service of Process Department replied to 14 the claimant's solicitors:

15 "Thank you for your letter of yesterday's 16 date and its enclosures. We have no record of 17 the April 1984 Loan Agreement and we would 18 comment that it is not unusual for us to 19 discover that agreements refer to us as process 20 agent even though we were not contacted about 21 them at the at the time of the execution. In 22 these circumstances, we are unable to do 23 anything with the documents sent with your 24 letter of 14th October 2002."

25 Mr McQuater submits that Clause 19.2 of

1 the Loan Agreement is an independent,
2 freestanding, irrevocable appointment of Law
3 Debenture Trust Corporation as Congo's agent
4 for service of process relating to the Loan
5 Agreement. He submits that the question is not 6 one of authority as between Congo and Law 7 Debenture Trust Corporation, but one of 8 contract between Congo and the parties to the 9 Loan Agreement relying upon a decision to that 10 effect of Moore-Bick J in AM International Bank 11 plc v Republic of Zambia & Others, decided on 12 23rd May 1997. It is to be observed that in 13 that case Law Debenture Trust Corporation had 14 originally been duly appointed although Zambia 15 had allowed the relationship to lapse, and 16 furthermore that Law Debenture Trust
17 Corporation did, in fact, forward the documents
18 to Zambia upon receipt thereof. However, I am
19 not sure that that affects Moore-Bick J's
20 reasoning. I would be inclined to follow
21 Moore-Bick J's approach, although I do not 22 regard this point as determinative of the 23 matters which I have to decide.

24 I should make it clear that, if I had to 25 decide the point, I would certainly not regard

1 service upon an honorary consul, as opposed to 2 a consul general, as good service under Clause
3 19.2. On the evidence before the court, Congo 4 does not maintain a Consulate in London. The 5 distinction between career consular officers
6 and honorary consular officers is well
7 established. Its significance is particularly 8 well illustrated by the response of the 9 honorary consul to the purported service upon 10 him in this case. Thus, when served with the 11 original process in October 2002, the honorary 12 consul responded:

13 "The package received this morning
14 regarding Kensington International Limited 15 against the Republic of Congo should not have 16 come to this office as we are the honorary 17 consulate and do not have any political or 18 financial connection with the Republic of 19 Congo-Brazzaville. We therefore ask you kindly 20 to collect the documents from us and forward
21 those to His Excellency, M. Henri Lopes,
22 Ambassade de La Republique Du 23 Congo-Brazzaville, Ambassador for France and 24 Great Britain, 37 Bis Rue Paul Valery, 75116,
25 Paris, France. His Excellency Monsieur Henri

1 Lopes is accredited at the Court of St James of 2 her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II government but 3 resident in Paris."

4 In fact, as appears from the subsequent 5 communication, the honorary consul did forward 6 the package to the Congolese ambassador in 7 Paris. When sent the documents relevant to the 8 summary judgment application before
9 Cresswell J, the honorary consul responded:

10 "The passage previously sent to the 11 honorary consulate was in good faith sent by 12 this office to the embassy in Paris. Another 13 package has now been received from you, which 14 will be returned to you. This is an honorary 15 consulate, existing solely for the promotion of 16 the Republic of Congo-Brazzaville in the UK.
17 As an honorary office, there is no financial 18 assistance received and no diplomatic bag.
19 Consequently, there is no money available to 20 pay for the transportation of your goods to 21 Paris. These documents should be forwarded to 22 an ambassador at an embassy or consul general 23 at a consulate of the Republic of Congo and not 24 to an honorary consulate."

25 The claimant has also sent documents by

1 DHL to what appear to be two relevant addresses 2 in Congo. This is not contractual service, but 3 it demonstrates that the claimant has taken 4 steps to ensure that the defendant is aware of 5 the proceedings, and I am satisfied that it
6 almost certainly is so aware of the proceedings
7 and of all the steps taken therein. The fact 8 remains, however, that in relation to the 9 originating process, as opposed to the 10 judgment, the claimant did not use the 11 diplomatic channels accorded by Section 12 (1)
12 of the State Immunity Act 1978.

13 Thirdly, Mr Qureshi raised a question mark 14 whether the claimant should properly be 15 regarded as a lending institution to which 16 an assignment could properly be made pursuant 17 to Clause 16 of the Loan Agreement. I have 18 some doubt as to what was intended to be 19 achieved by the apparent attempt to limit the 20 class of acceptable assignees to "any bank or 21 lending institution". Plainly, the claimant is 22 not in the business of lending money in the 23 sense in which that expression is ordinarily 24 used.

25 I am not sure that I can derive too much

1 assistance from the definition of lending in 2 Annex 1 to the directive 2002/12/EC of the 3 European Parliament and the Council of 4 20th March 2000. Under that instrument
5 lending includes factoring which is , I think,
6 an apt description of the claimant's business.
7 If lending institution was intended to embrace 8 any institution which engaged in factoring of 9 debts, I cannot see what purpose was served by 10 adding lending institution to bank by way of 11 description of the permitted class of assignee.
12 I have a feeling that it may have been intended 13 to limit the class to regulated institutions.
14 Again, I do not need to address this point 15 further, and, of course, Cresswell J has 16 inferentially decided that the assignments are 17 valid.

18 Likewise, I do not need to address
19 Mr Qureshi's observation which concerns the 20 question whether the signatories of the Loan 21 Agreement purportedly on behalf of the 22 defendant had the authority to bind the state.
23 Clause 7 of the Loan Agreement creates 24 a condition precedent to the obligation of the 25 lending banks in this regard. So far as

1 relevant, it provides for service upon the 2 banks of a copy certified as true and correct
3 by the Minister of Finance of the People's 4 Republic of the Congo or by a person duly 5 authorised by him of (1) documents evidencing
6 the authority of the person who has executed
7 the agreement for the borrower, including 8 without limitation an authorisation granted by 9 the president of the People's Republic of the 10 Congo. Furthermore, at subclause C of 11 Clause 7, there is a provision for the 12 furnishing to the lenders of an opinion of the 13 president of the Supreme Court of People's 14 Republic of the Congo in the form of a French
15 text corresponding substantially to an English 16 text set out in Exhibit C. Exhibit C includes 17 the following paragraphs:
18 "2. Mr Noté (several French words) is 19 fully empowered to sign the agreement, the 20 related agreement concerning management fee and 21 all other documents in connection with the 22 agreement on behalf of the People's Republic of 23 the Congo."
24 There is no evidence either way as to 25 whether this condition precedent was satisfied.

1 Mr McQuater says that it was exclusively for 2 the benefit of the banks and could be waived by 3 them. I think he is probably right, although I
4 would regard it as very strange if compliance
5 with this part of the clause was, in fact, 6 waived. I have, however, already referred to 7 other evidence from which it is appropriate to 8 infer that Congo recognises the Loan Agreement 9 as containing obligations binding upon it.

10 Mr Qureshi's fifth point is that if the 11 injunction was granted, it might subsequently 12 be necessary to investigate whether any 13 creation by Congo of the status of preferential 14 creditor amounted to what would be recognised 15 in public international law as an act of state, 16 which would not be justiciable before the 17 domestic court. I agree that that is 18 a possibility, although I note that Mr Qureshi
19 does not suggest that the pre-financing 20 agreements to which I have already referred or 21 similar such commercial agreements would 22 attract this treatment.

23 This point is, I think, closely allied to 24 the seventh point, which concerns the nature of 25 the relief sought generally, which is directed

1 towards the coercion of third parties rather 2 than securing immediate compliance by the 3 defendant. Because I regard this last point as 4 determinative, I regard it as unnecessary to 5 attempt any analysis of the pari passu clause.
6 In any event, with all respect to Cresswell J, 7 who did not have the advantage of the 8 observations of the amicus which have been made 9 to me, that question would be better addressed 10 in a debate as between the original parties to 11 an agreement in which the clause appears and, 12 moreover, in a case where the party seeking to 13 enforce the clause does not derive its title in 14 substantial part from original parties who have 15 already colluded in its apparent breach.

16 Mr McQuater submits that the purpose of 17 the injunctive relief is to ensure that Congo
18 performs its agreement. I am simply unprepared 19 to grant such relief to a party who declines to 20 tell the court what is the consideration given 21 for the acquisition of the rights sought to be 22 enforced, particularly where those rights have 23 not been immediately acquired by the claimant 24 from those who were originally entitled 25 thereto, and where the relevant breaches of

1 agreement have, in all probability, been 2 continuing for at least 18 years, aided and 3 abetted by some of the original lenders and the 4 original assigners. In these circumstances I
5 am simply unable to conclude that equity 6 requires the grant of such relief. Insofar as 7 I am asked to balance hardship, I lack the 8 material on which to conduct the exercise.

9 However I should make it clear that even 10 had I been told of the consideration and, on 11 the assumption that it is more than derisory
12 and represents a substantial investment, I
13 should still have declined to grant the relief 14 claimed. The claimant already has a judgment in 15 respect of the amount due. It is seeking 16 relief over and above the normal mechanisms of 17 execution. Compliance by the defendant with 18 the injunctive relief sought can for all 19 practical purposes be achieved only by 20 distraint against assets of the defendant,
21 although for the reasons which I have already 22 given I am doubtful whether such measures could 23 be taken against this defendant. If, however, 24 there are available assets of the defendant 25 against which such measures could be taken they

1 can equally well, indeed more appropriately, be 2 made the subject of execution of the judgment 3 debt.

4 Moreover the order which is sought, 5 particularly paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, would 6 be likely to disrupt arrangements which the 7 defendant has already made for the payment of 8 creditors. The task of supervising compliance
9 with any such order would be both unmanageable 10 and invidious where the defendant against whom 11 it is made is a foreign sovereign State. Many 12 of the world's banks maintain offices in 13 London. The court would potentially be asked 14 to intervene in respect of transactions having 15 nothing whatever to do with this jurisdiction 16 simply upon the basis of the presence within 17 the jurisdiction of the entity contracting with 18 the defendant.

19 I do not accept that the sole 20 consideration in deciding whether to grant such 21 relief is the question whether compliance with 22 the order of the court will benefit the 23 claimant, or achieve the purpose for which it 24 is sought.

25 The court is also concerned with the

1 question whether damages or directly available 2 monetary relief is an adequate remedy and with 3 the question whether there is any realistic
4 prospect that the court can by direct action
5 against the party enjoined enforce compliance.
6 Mr McQuater rightly reminds me that it is not 7 uncommon for compliance with, for example, 8 freezing orders to be secured by service of 9 notice upon third parties such as banks. That 10 is of course correct, but such orders are still 11 in a meaningful sense directed in the first 12 instance to the defendant and are only made in 13 cases where the court has jurisdiction over the 14 defendant. I do not regard it as an 15 appropriate exercise of my discretion, at any 16 rate in the particular circumstances of this 17 case, to make an order compliance with which 18 can only realistically be achieved by coercion 19 of third parties. I view with disquiet in the 20 circumstances of this case a situation in which 21 third parties are potentially exposed to penal 22 consequences which could never be visited upon 23 the defendant to whom the order is actually 24 directed.

25 For all these reasons therefore in the

1 exercise of my discretion I decline to grant
2 the injunctive relief sought.

3 It remains to consider the declaratory
4 relief. As I indicated during the hearing I am 5 entirely satisfied on the basis of the evidence 6 before me that the defendant has adopted in 7 relation to its oil exports cumbersome and 8 apparently commercially disadvantageous and 9 inflexible pre-financing structures with the 10 interposition of special purpose vehicles for 11 the very purpose of preventing its creditors 12 seizing its oil in execution of debts owed by 13 it.

14 In relation to the negative pledge the 15 claimant eschewed any intention to attempt to 16 unscramble past transactions. Paragraphs 2 and 17 3 of the draft order before the Court do by 18 contrast attempt to prevent payments pursuant 19 to existing arrangements save on a pari passu 20 basis. Since I have concluded that it is 21 inappropriate to grant that relief and since 22 the claimant would have no wish to attempt to 23 unscramble past security arrangements made by 24 the defendant with its creditors I have 25 concluded that the declaration sought would be

1 of no utility and that I ought in the exercise
2 of my discretion to decline to grant it. If 3 anything the existence of such a declaration
4 could be positively productive of uncertainty 5 as to the propriety of third parties acting in 6 accordance with their existing contractual 7 obligations.

8 In any event the declaration sought is I
9 consider too unwieldy for the court to consider 10 granting it. Simply by way of example it is 11 unsatisfactory for the court to make 12 declarations by reference to conduct which 13 cannot be described more precisely than appears 14 at paragraph 26 of the particulars of claim.
15 Since, however, I have concluded that the 16 declaratory relief would serve no useful 17 purpose over and above the money judgment which 18 the claimant has already obtained I decline to 19 grant it.
